Dr. Wayne W. Dyer Execution (en) 27 Comments Throughout your life you went through the process of conditioning that created a head overflowing I am not. As a schoolboy with less than satisfactory grades on your report card, you thought to yourself, I'm not smart. You put anywhere other than number one and say I'm not talented. You feel critical and think I'm not very good. You look in the mirror and compare yourself to a glamorous movie idol or a homecoming queen and tell yourself I'm not attractive. Your relationship fractures and you think I'm unloved or I'm unworthy. They, and many others like them, are repeated throughout your development of years and into adulthood, and become your basic definition of self-esteem. Overcoming this I have no mentality begins with trusting your inner world of spirit. There are no boundaries that limit your inner world. But your worldview and your self-esteem in the outside world are determined by your five feelings. The outside world is constantly changing, which, by our definition, means that it is not real. Realizing that what remains the same is the only reality can lead you to a majestic awakening right here, right now. Run through as great inventory as you can the things you would like to define your life. Then make a shift in your imagination from I am not or I hope to become I. You want what follows, I must be consistent with your higher self, who is God. Starting with your internal dialogue, just change the words that define your self-image. Redefine your self-esteem by choosing the words you choose to put into your imagination. Try this reformulation of your inner world as the beginning of a step to access the help of your higher self and fulfill your desires. Instead of me not being able to get the job done, the transition to I'm capable of. Similarly, replace the proclamations I am not able to live in peace with I peace. I'm unlucky in love being replaced by I love. I'm unworthy of happiness becoming me happiness. The words I, which you constantly use to determine who you are and what you are capable of, are holy expressions in the name of God-higher aspect of yourself. Break lifelong habits by unwittingly besmirching is a holy name. Stop using derogatory shortcuts to cast a shadow over your holy self. Always make your first consideration of honoring your divine spirit. This will allow you to climb to previously uncollected heights. Teach your outer self to accept the unlimited power of your inner spirit and what you put in your imagination can be true for you. Topics: Divine Spirit, Me, Inner Spirit Comments - This is a 2-part review posted on my personal blog. This is Part 1. What follows these two simple words will determine what kind of life you live. (pg 1) Austin says the words that follow I should be anything but assertions about our own identity. For example, I am: blessed, successful, successful, wise, wonderful, healthy, victorious, skilled, prosperous, valuable... You get the idea. After three introductory chapters, each of the remaining 16 chapters is dedicated to the statement I am. For this 2-part review is posted on my personal blog. This is Part 1. What follows these two simple words will determine what kind of life you live. (pg 1) Austin says the words that follow I should be anything but positive statements about our own identity. For example, I am blessed, successful, talented, wise, wonderful, healthy, victorious, skilled, prosperous, valuable... You get the idea. After three introductory chapters, each of the remaining 16 chapters is dedicated to the statement I am. For example, Chapter 4 says: I am blessed, a magnet for blessings, or Chapter 7, entitled I Am a Masterpiece, see myself as a masterpiece. The book is somewhat repetitive, each chapter presents similar ideas from a different angle. Austin says we need to dwell on these I'm statements about myself and he provides a list of I affirmations. We need to speak to them, read them, meditate on them, and get them in our spirit. (pg 13) Do I even need to make the observation that there is something narcissistic and deeply self-centered about all this? It's an ego trip. I wrote a whole chapter in my own book (Positively powerless) about the dangers of pride. I hardly think the Philippians 4:8 encourage to think about things that are wonderful and excellent concludes that we should think of ourselves as wonderful and excellent. Colossus 3:1-2 speaks to correct our hearts and minds on JESUS. But I got distracted. Oh wait, Austin assures us that it's not pride, but quiet confidence (pg 5). Phew.However - I suggest that instead of being about yourself, imagine about another person. Imagine a close friend or colleague who constantly says wonderful things about himself. I'm pretty sure you'll find them unbearable to be around! They will be seen as the most important egomania. Or maybe just viewed in a sad way as a deeply insecure person. The reason we should say these corroborating words about ourselves is because when we continue to talk about them, they will become a reality. According to Austin, words have creative power. They're like electricity. You have to send your words in the direction you want your life to go. (pg 42) You have to invite good things into your life through the power of your words. Positive words about yourself will bring health, strength and abundance of your way. Negative words invite to struggle and absence. Nothing happens while you're talking. (pg 35) Wow, my friends. Hey, Joel Austin is a Christian who pastors a Christian church. The book often refers to characters from the Bible, and random Bible verses are referenced to provide support. This will be analysed in part But for now ... Words have creative power, and we we them to bring good to our lives? When I read Austin, his words were familiar to me. Why? I recently wrote a book where I researched the history of positive thinking. Austin's philosophy promotes about the power of our thoughts/words comes from the New Thought mind-strength movement in the late 19th century. Far from being Christian, this movement was born into occult and mystical subcultures, influenced by Eastern religion as well. The God of this movement was seen as an impersonal force, not as a personal being. Thoughts were perceived as things with a mystical type of causal force to influence reality and attract events into your life. You may have heard the phrase The Law of Attraction, which was re-popularized these days through author Rhonda Byrne and her book The Secret. The seeds of the modern New Age movement from the late 19th century are the New Thought Movement as well. Maybe you think I'm going to leave the deep end here. Am I accusing Austin of entering the occult or the New Age? No! But having recently read the original source material from the historical and modern movements New Thought/Law of Attraction, Austin's teachings clearly echo with him. Ralph Waldo Trine was a prolific writer of New Thought 100 years ago. Listen to Trine's words: Send your thought-thought is a force, and it has the occult power of unknown proportions, when it is properly used and wisely directed - send your idea that the right situation or the right work will come to you at the right time, in the right direction... Have. Joel. Osteen.As said, I'm not really saying Austin is that stuff. Rather, he was influenced by it, whether he understood it or not. We were all influenced by this. The New Thought movement eventually became a positive movement of thinking in the mid-twentieth century and changed American culture. I think Austin is a naturally optimistic type of guy, and it was easy for him to inadvertently (?) mix thought power with Christian.However that doesn't work. When you mix two things whose basic teachings contradict each other, it creates a lot of problems. You end up with a weakened Christianity whose principles are being undermined, and with distortions of the Christian faith. Putting non-Christian roots aside, I turn to common sense. Do you really think it's possible for simple words that come out of your mouth: radiate power in the universe, create, attract events... and ultimately change reality?? If so, you are indeed a very powerful person. I have to stress that it's not about whether a good or bad attitude is in life. If you are grouchy and angry all the time, this is unlikely to lead to promotion at work. That's not what Austin talks about at all. In Part 2, I'll provide an analysis of Austin's interactions with the Bible. Please know that I'm not attacking Austin as a human being. He sure has a charming smile and I think he means well. A lot back he took the mantle from his father, feeling, feeling, do it, and I think Austin never thought where the ministry would go. However, here he finds himself years later.
